Biographical Note

The first members of the Brevoort family in America came from Holland prior to 1655 and soon thereafter settled in Bushwick, then a separate village that did not become part of Brooklyn until 1855. After twenty years there, they returned to New York where the family prospered.

Henry Brevoort (1747-1841) was a successful farmer whose lands lay just outside of the early city limits of New York. His estate consisted of 86 acres between 9th street and 18th Street, bounded by Fifth Avenue on the west and the Bowery on the east, thus part of today's West Village. The opening of Broadway up to 23rd Street forced New York City street commissioners to create a dog-leg bend at 10th Street, as Brevoort was determined to prevent the disruption of his estate. Brevoort and son Henry, Jr. prevented the opening of 11th Street between Broadway and the Bowery in the 1830's and '40's to prevent the destruction of the old family farm house.

Henry Brevoort, Jr. (1782-1848) was widely respected for his adventurous travels and artistic interests. He accompanied Lewis and Clark on their expedition to the Pacific Northwest, 1803-06, and he spent a great deal of time in the North American wilderness working for John Jacob Astor's American Fur Company. He was equally at home and well received in the best salons in Europe during his travels abroad. Henry Brevoort, Jr. was a close friend of Washington Irving's and was primarily responsible for the publication of Irving's Sketch Book.

J. Carson Brevoort (1818-1887), Henry Jr.'s son, was educated in Europe during his parents' travels. He graduated from Baron Fellenberg's school in Hofwyl, Switzerland and then earned a degree in civil engineering from the École Centrale des Arts et Manufactures in Paris. He served as Washington Irving's private secretary following Irving's appointment as United States Minister to Spain in 1842. Brevoort married Elizabeth Dorothea Lefferts in 1845 and moved to Brooklyn. There he managed the large land holdings of his father-in-law, Judge Leffert Lefferts. In Brooklyn, Brevoort gained renown for his scholarly interest and public service. He studied history, entomology and ichthyology and also served for many years as a member of the Brooklyn Board of Education and the Board of Water Commissioners. Brevoort also helped to found the Long Island Historical Society in 1863, served as its President for 10 years and was a Director of the Society until his death.

J. Carson Brevoort's only child, Henry L. Brevoort (1849-1895), followed his father's interest in engineering and became one of the country's foremost patent and invention lawyers, with a client list that included Westinghouse, Western Union and the New York and Brooklyn Bridge Company. He was also a founder in 1890 of the Brevoort Savings Bank in Brooklyn.

Scope and Content Note

The Brevoort Family Papers contain 141 items for the period 1760-1879 relating to the personal and the business lives of family members. The bulk of the papers are from 1828-1847, chiefly the papers of Henry Brevoort, Jr. and J. Carson Brevoort. Nearly sixty percent of the collection consists of correspondence, and most of these are letters from J. Carson Brevoort to family members. Carson's letters deal primarily with family and school news, although eight letters from 1841 describe an expedition into Quebec Province to survey the area and to take daguerreotypes of the landscape. Legal documents make up fifteen per cent of the collection, including estate records, land conveyances and business documents. The balance of the collection consists of genealogical notes, printed matter, certificates and a few non-Brevoort items. Nb: the "series" appellation for the different generations of Brevoorts was discarded, MHP, 2007.
